Supermodels make the best role models. Let them lead by example, let them follow their dreams and let their actions speak louder than their words.

The theme banner under which competition is expected to heat up among entrants at this year's Miss World Supermodel Pageant that is taking place at Amanuca Island Resort and Spa, Fiji. Entering its fourth day of competition today will see the models feature in a preliminary lunch and visit Tokoriki Island where the Movie Castaway was filmed.

On location film and still photo shoots will be followed by a dinner that would also be attended by VIP guests where this year's Miss Congeniality Voting be carried out where organisers will be judging the models survivor style. The international competition for models aged between 20 and 30, was created to find out who the leading world supermodels are regardless of their marital status.

Two of Fiji's own; Miss Fiji Naziah Ali and Tracey Mansell representing Fiji in the Miss Teen category, will be among the 24 other hopefuls contesting in the World Supermodel Pageant later this month.

Miss Ali said so far all had been going well.

It's coming along well. I have a lot of support from my family and friends and I am lucky for that. The winner of the World Supermodel Pageant will have the opportunity to promote the healthy lifestyle she lives, the clothes she wears, the beauty products and make-up she chooses as well as her sporting and career interests. The show ends on Saturday.
