MISS Lebanon Danielle Salamouny was crowned the winner of this year's World's Supermodel Pageant at the Amanuca Island Resort yesterday.

One week after being crowned Miss Lebanon in her home country, the 22-year-old was excited to win the world title thousands of miles away from her loved ones.

She was still coming to terms with her achievement last evening, taking into consideration the tough competition.

"I was confident of my chances and I am excited to win here in Fiji," she said.

"This achievement will be cherished forever and I am so happy to be crowned the winner. I dedicate this win to my parents and sister back in Lebanon and also to the people of Fiji," she said.

Miss Salamouny said winning her first world title inspired her to pursue her dream in the business and her aim to continue to pursue the best in the business.

In the Miss Teen category, Fiji-born Miss South Pacific Michaela Swammy outscored her other seven fellow competitors to win the Miss Teen title.

"I was shocked to hear my name being called," Miss Swammy said.

World Supermodel pageant chief executive officer Gavin Dooley said the competition was a success and congratulated the winners of both categories.

Amanuca Resort and Spa CEO Victor Chua said the hotel was privileged to host the world event. He thanked the world supermodel pageants, the crew, the Fiji Government and the media for a fruitful event.
